Curious Evidence of a War Loss.

From the Quebec Chronicle.

An insurance company, according to a nautical magazine, refused to pay a policy on a British vessel, the Hyfira, which disappeared in 1917, on the ground that there was no proof forthcoming that the ship has been lost by war risks. Unexpected proof of the vessel's fate has recently been furnished in the shape of a photograph taken by one of the occupants of a German submarine at the moment the vessel was sunk. This picture supplied the necessary evidence, and the insurance company, it is stated, has been required to pay the amount claimed.
